Family History Month

The wonderfully effective American initiative of designating the month of October each year as ‘Family History Month’ has certainly taken hold on this side of the Atlantic over the past few years.

The biggest event in the Irish genealogical calendar is the annual ‘Back to Our Past’ event at the RDS in Dublin from October 21st to 23rd with nearly every major genealogical service company now with stands at the show.

This Society will have a stand at the RDS which has proven to be extremely popular with visitors to the show. Eddie Gahan and his team will be on hand to assist with all sorts of genealogical queries and problems.

Also at the show this year, Ed Gilbert, a PhD student at the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland (RCSI) will deliver a talk on the ‘Irish DNA Atlas Project’ at the Genetic Genealogy Ireland series of lectures. The project is an academic collaboration between this Society and the RCSI which has two main objectives (1) to further our understanding of the population history of Ireland and (2) to help us understand how genes influence disease within Ireland.

The project's criteria and methodologies are quite unique as participants, all volunteers, must have all of their eight great grandparents from the same general area of Ireland. The aim is to gather scientific data on the population of the island of Ireland before the largescale internal migration of the latter part of the 19th century.

It is anticipated that the results of this hugely important project will be published towards the end of the year or in the spring of 2017. The findings are eagerly awaited by genetic genealogists, medieval historians, archaeologists and academics from many other disciplines.

The extensive list of exhibitors and indeed, the line-up of excellent speakers for the various talks and seminars, is very impressive indeed.

So, if you're attending the show, please do drop by the GSI stand to meet the GSI team.

YOUR FAMILY HISTORY?

If you are thinking of starting your family history research and just don't know where to start, don't despair as Eddie and his team are on hand to show you the ropes.

Whilst the Society does not undertake commercial research assignments, it does provide research advice to enable you to take a D.I.Y. approach to your research.

See page 4 of this newsletter for the times of opening of the Society's Archive and Research Centre. Also, please note that they will be on-hand at Back to Our Past in the RDS again this year.

Eddie Gahan and his Team ready to discuss your Family History Research

Dublin 1950-1970—Houses, Flats and High-Rise

Most people undertaking family history in Ireland today from Dublin would have grown up, started working or college or, indeed, moved into a new home in period covered by the latest volume in the series 'The Making of Dublin City' edited by Joseph Brady, Ruth McManus and Annagret Simms.

'Dublin 1950-1970—Houses, Flats and High Rise' (ISBN: 978-1-84682-624-5 : 464pp+ b+w illustrations: P/bk : Price €29.95 : web-price €26.95 : H/bk €55.00) by Joseph Brady and published by Four Courts Press is an exceptionally well researched and wonderfully presented work that is essential reading for all local or social historians with an interest in Dublin and its environs. This in-depth study includes much of the areas now covered, since 1994, by the four "Dublin Local Authorities" - Fingal, South Dublin, Dublin City and Dún Laoghaire Rathdown.

This period was one of rapid expansion in the housing stock of the capital and, as a generally "low density" city, the surrounding villages and small towns were gradually transformed or incorporated into new suburban districts of housing estates, both social and private. Hundreds of local areas, so familiar to us today, had their origins in this period. New communities were established during this period, many of which, endure to this day. The author, as a geographer, provides both the framework for the expansion of the housing stock and also profiles the demographic and economic drivers for these developments. Ireland was changing rapidly, some would argue with justification that, during this period "modernity" had finally arrived. The industrialisation that had commenced in the 1960s had changed the economic trajectory of the country and by the end of the period covered by this book, Ireland was well on its way to joining the European Economic Community, the forerunner of the European Union, which it joined in 1973.

This volume is of exceptional importance as it chronicles a period of Dublin's history that, for many readers, is within their own lifetimes or that of their parents. In that respect, as a social narrative, this book is not only a history of modern Dublin, it is the story of the ordinary Dubliners and their communities. It is extremely well illustrated, with copious notes and with details on individual housing estates, roads and their dates of construction, it is bound to have a very personal appeal for many.

Society News in Brief

Corporate Governance: The Board of Directors of the Society at its meeting of October 6th 2016 adopted a new governing instrument for the Society (an incorporated body) in accordance with the Companies Act, 2014.

Members authorised the formulation and adoption of a 'Constitution' by the Board at the Annual General Meeting held on March 8th 2016. This 'Constitution' is a simplified 'one-page' replacement for the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company which were adopted on incorporation in 2000.

The Society will retain its status as a 'Company Limited by Guarantee' under the Companies Act, 2014.

Archive Catalogue: The Director of Archival Services, Lua Ó Scolaí, has sourced an archive program that will be uploaded to the Society's website in the coming weeks.

This facility will allow visitors to the Society's website to search the catalogue of the holdings in An Daonchartlann—the Society's Archive and Research Centre at the Carlisle Pier, Dún Laoghaire. The holdings can then be easily accessed by visiting An Daonchartlann.

Outreach Programme: The Director of the Outreach Programme, Eddie Gahan, has presented the Board with a list of voluntary organisations and groups that have requested the Society to give talks or provide a stand at an event.

The geographic spread of the venues is very encouraging, however, Eddie is planning to roll out the Outreach Programme strategically to minimise costs and to ensure that as many venues as possible can be included over the coming months.

Organisations, clubs and groups interested in Society's Outreach Programme—please contact Eddie on eddie\_gahan\_snr@hotmail.com

Annual Journal: The Director of Internet Services, Sales and Marketing, and Publications, Tom Conlon, is seeking articles for the 2017 issue of the Society's Annual Journal.

The articles may be on any aspect of genealogical research undertaken by the author and could include, biographies, family histories, accounts of historic events or archival resources. Help is on hand for layout and editing, so if you are interested in providing a piece for publication please contact Tom at web@familyhistory.ie

GSI in Georgia

For the fourth year in a row the Genealogical Society of Ireland has, once again, represented Ireland at a major international conference dealing with flags and heraldry.

The CEO of the two branches, Heraldry Ireland and Vexillology Ireland, Stan Zamyatin was present in Tbilisi for the 1st Georgian National Conference of Vexillology and Heraldry (29 September - 1 October). While there he gave an important paper entitled "The Irish Harp – Then and Now" which provided an outline on the history and evolution of the harp in Irish iconography from the 9th century to the present day.

The Irish representation in Georgia was symbolic in two ways: Firstly, in 2016 our two countries are celebrating their 20th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations and many initiatives have already taken place this year. Secondly the main royal family to rule Georgia was the House of Bagrationi which has historically depicted a harp on its coat of arms.

The conference was a great success and our Georgian colleagues were very hospitable. The many presentations and trip to a number of historic Georgian sights all provided for a well-organized, balanced and academic event. It was inspiring to see the work that the Georgian State Council of Heraldry has already accomplished.

We are very honoured to have received a personal invitation to attend from the Chief Herald of Georgia, Mr. Mamuka Gongadze (pictured above with Stan) and we are very grateful to the Dún Laoghaire Rathdown County Council for providing financial assistance to be present in Tbilisi, the spectacularly beautiful capital city of the Republic of Georgia.

Stan is confident that the Society will be able to return the favour and invite our Georgian friends to attend the ICV 29 Congress in 2021 which we hope to host in Dún Laoghaire Rathdown. This trip was an essential part of the networking and canvassing votes for the ICV in London in 2017 where a vote will be taken on the location of the 2021 Congress.

In Brief....

Wicklow in Revolt—1913 to 1923

'Wicklow in Revolt – A History of County Wicklow from 1913-1923', edited by Henry Cairns, published by the Old Bray Society, price €25.00 This is a very comprehensive overview of the eventful and over reaching occurrences that took place in Co. Wicklow during the decade 1913-1923 consisting of essays provided by several local historians.

Eva O'Cathaoir in the opening chapter 'The Fenian Movement in County Wicklow' provides a history of the Irish Republican Brother in the county including the principal individuals in the county and some of the events and activities they engaged in. Given that many members of the I.R.B. ultimately rose to prominence in the Irish Volunteers, the history of that movement is covered by Henry Cairns in 'The Irish Volunteers in Wicklow. Needing arms, the Irish Volunteers engaged in gun-running operations and Dr. Ruan O'Donnell looks at 'Arming the Volunteers: The Kilcoole Gun-running in Context', an event that took place at Kilcoole, Co. Wicklow, a week after the landing of arms at Howth, with an additional contribution by Henry Cairns looking at some of the local I.R.B. members who participated in this operation.

What happened in Arklow is covered in 'Arklow's 1916-1923 Experience' by Jim Rees in which he recalls the numerous events that took in that town during this period while John Finlay contributes a corresponding chapter on 'Wicklow through the Troubles.' Henry Cairns also looks at the impact of 'The Rising and County Wicklow', 'Reorganisation 1917', 'The Call to Arms', 'January 1921 to the Truce' and 'Civil War.'

There are several Appendices covering: The Wicklow Roll of Honour, Some Weapons and Equipment used in Ireland from 1916 to 1923, Some Memories of the Republican Courts in County Wicklow, The Structure of Local Government in County Wicklow up to 1921, Members of the R.I.C. from County Wicklow or serving in County Wicklow who were Killed or Wounded during the Period 1916 to 1921, Return of Officers, Warrant Officers, N.C.Os and Men stationed at Bray, 2nd Eastern Division, Some Intelligence Activities in the Brigade Area, John Redmond's Speech at Woodenbridge and Select Bibliography.

This excellent comprehensive book begins with the formation of the Irish Volunteers and concludes with the Civil War in which former comrades became bitter enemies and is an excellent chronicle of this eventful decade in County Wicklow with a vast amount of information crammed into its 235 A4 sized pages

This is a limited edition publication and over the counter copies can be obtained from The Town Hall Bookshop, 23 Florence Road, Bray, Co. Wicklow, and finally, to quote a well-known retailer – "when they're gone, they're gone". James Scannell

Checkout the Society's website www.familyhistory.ie

Labour in Kingstown, 1890-1920

Another new publication by a member of the Society explores a much neglected aspect of the social history of Dún Laoghaire, formally Kingstown. The story of the working class and the development of labour movements in the three decades before independence has only been briefly referenced or, indeed, entirely overlooked in most local history publications. 'Labour in Kingstown, 1890-1920' by Charles Callan is an extremely well researched series of essays based on the available archival material and on contemporary newspaper reports dealing with organised labour, political movements, industrial disputes and the general conditions of workers and their families. The political history of Kingstown from 1890 to 1920 is explored as is the early political wrangling over social housing that seems oddly familiar today. The author describes this work as "an account of labour affairs as recorded in the public press and in some official records" and much of this research was undertaken in the Society's Archive and Research Centre. This excellent work was published privately and therefore, all enquiries should be sent to chascallan@gmail.com

Précis of the September Lecture

On Tuesday Sept. 13th the topic was 'Linking Genealogy and Social History' by Billy Saunderson. In his Lecture, GSI member Billy, highlighted the opportunity that genealogical research offers to also explore and record the social surroundings of families in past times. Billy used his own research of his Saunderson and Nyhan families as examples of information unearthed. Historical maps of villages and country town lands can be explored to identify farm sizes, proximity of neighbours and other activities such as local pounds where stray and seized animals may have been held. Billy encouraged the audience when searching church and civil records to also record instances where family members may have acted as witnesses or sponsors at the birth, marriage or death of friends and neighbours. School records also represent a great source of information on localities and families. He presented the data he had accumulated on a number of members of his family and told how members of his family still resident in their home town land were able to identify with very strong family friendships and connections that still exist in present times. He stressed that curiosity was a great attribute for genealogical and social history researchers and presented a number of pieces of significant information on his family which would have been lost to history had he not followed up on vague references to events, contacts from people offering family information and other leads. Much of the social history discovered has been recorded and made available to local interest groups. The lecture was followed by an informative question and answer session.

IRISH DNA ATLAS

The Irish DNA Atlas is collaborative academic project undertaken by Prof. Gianpiero Cavalleri and Edmund Gilbert, PhD student, of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and Séamus O'Reilly, Michael Merrigan, Dr. Darren McGettigan from the Genealogical Society of Ireland.

The main objectives of the project are 1) to further our understanding of the population history of Ireland, and 2) to help us understand how genes influence disease within Ireland.
